

In a faraway town called Brusselville, everyone ate brussel sprouts. Just brussel sprouts, as no other vegetables would grow. Sunny, a little girl who lived in the town, wanted to help the towns people find more vegetables to eat; more than just brussel sprouts. She was a clever girl and knew to grow other vegetables, you needed seeds, good soil, sunshine and rain. Sunny went to a forest on the edge of the town, hoping to find someone who had some seeds. As soon as she stepped into the forest, she shivered. Inside was cold and dark and no light could get through.

After hours of walking, Sunny discovered a clearing in the forest. In the middle was a thatched house, surrounded by a huge garden, full of vegetables!
“How wonderful! I must ask the owner to give me some seeds, so I can take them home to grow” she thought.

She noticed that there were no brussel sprout in the garden and ran up to the door in excitement. Sunny knocked on the door three times. After a few seconds, a small lady about seventy years old opened the door. Sunny quickly introduced herself and then, told her about Brusselville and the vegetable growing problem.

“That’s quite a problem you have there!” said the lady. “My name is Clara and I would love to help your town.” Clara shows her huge sacks of seeds in a barn behind the house as well as manure and they both set off, back to Brusselville.

When they arrive at Brusselville, Sunny and Clara go to the Majors house to tell him the good news. “Why do you need my help?” the Mayor says in confusion.

“Your garden is huge,” said Sunny “So we thought you could donate part of your garden to the town, everyone could plant seeds and over time we could eat something besides brussel sprouts!”

“What a good idea!” said the Major in joy.

So the next day, the towns people gathered together in the Mayors garden and while some made the journey to Clara’s house to collect seeds and manure, others turned the soil. They then sowed the seeds and watered them. Sunny helped everyone and at the end of the day, many types of vegetable seeds had been sewn.

A few months later, on the day of the vegetable festival, a huge rainbow filled the sky. At the end of the day Mayor said “Well done Sunny, this was so much fun, you have really have brought sunshine to our town today, thank you!”

The vegetables continued to grow well month after month, like magic! The mayor even changed the name of the town to ‘Homegrown!’ The town now sells vegetables to people all over the world and people come from far and wide to see the town and eat the vegetables.
